

DO DUCKS
LIKE RAIN?

When ducks “comb”
their feathers
with their bills,
they leave a layer
of oil on top.

The oil makes water
slide off. It keeps
the feathers that
are closest to the
duck’s body dry
and warm.

In a lake or in
the rain, ducks
are waterproof!

Raindrops are falling on Mama Duck.

She likes the wet and mushy muck.

A colorful illustration of a rainy day. A young girl with dark hair in pigtails, wearing a red raincoat and blue boots, stands in a puddle holding a pink umbrella. To her right, a red squirrel sits on a tree branch, holding two acorns. The background is a soft, rainy scene with green foliage and a light blue sky with white rain streaks.

DO SQUIRRELS
LIKE RAIN?

If it is not raining
too hard, a squirrel
will curl its tail
over its head to make a built-in
umbrella!

In heavy rains,
squirrels stay
in their nests
to keep dry.

Rain won't scare a squirrel away.
He stays busy on a rainy day.

DO BEETLES
LIKE RAIN?

A beetle has
a hard, shell-like
covering that prevents it from getting soaked.

Brown beetle's shell is shiny and hard.

He doesn't mind a rainy yard.
